Ms. Deborah Holman

Dear Class of 2016:

What a year it has been: a tumultuous election campaign, terror attacks abroad, continued national challenges around race and diversity. These big events impact us locally, and as a school this year, we felt the intensity of all these events. One of Brookline High's legacies is that it is a place where true listening, debating, and thinking are highly valued. These are at the core of any democratic community. This year, as a school community, we had many conversations about national and international events, and about how our diverse school could become even more truly integrated in terms of race, ethnicity, gender, class, religion, sexual orientation, and disability.

We have said that Brookline High should aspire to be a microcosm of an ideal America - in terms of values like equality, opportunity, discourse, and debate. With that aspiration as a guide this year, our conversations and thinking went deep, was honest and edgy, represented multiple points of view and styles, and showed that students and faculty feel deeply about important issues. Faculty and I hope that for each of you, Brookline High was a good space to share ideas, try on new thinking, make mistakes, learn and grow. We know that the skills you learned here will serve you well into your futures. We are sad to see you go, but confident in your abilities to move into the wide world, to grow as citizens, and to contribute to your greater communities. We are proud of you and wish you the best in your futures.

Back to school night altercation addressed

In response to an altercation on Back to School Night, Thursday, Oct. 15, Headmaster Deborah Holman, Interim Superintendent Joseph Connelly and Brookline Police Chief Daniel O'Leary met on Thursday, Dec. 10 during X- and E-blocks in Holman's office with four students, three of whom were directly affected.

Involved were four students of color, a White off-duty police officer, his ex-wife and his 21-year-old daughter.

According to a student involved in the altercation, the students were on Greenough Street before Back to School Night. Two of the students were standing on the road in a parking spot, while the other two stood on the sidewalk.

The off-duty officer accelerated into the parking spot in his car, almost hitting the two who were in the road, according to the student. According to an investigation summary report released by O'Leary and Human Resources Director Sandra DeBow-Huang, an argument among the officer, his family and the students ensued, but particularly between the officer's daughter and one of the students. The report, which was released about two weeks ago, did not find the off-duty officer at fault in the altercation.

Holman said she scheduled the meeting shortly after the release of the report to give the students a chance to discuss their reactions to it.

"Once the report came out, the students had some disappointment with the outcome," Holman said. "Staff here and myself knew that they would. So we said, 'Let's have them sit with the Chief of Police and have a conversation about the outcome, about how the students have processed the events over the last couple months.'"

Three of the students involved in the altercation, including sophomores Juliette Estime and Salam Kasu and senior Gabriela Torres, attended the meeting. Yama Estime, Juliette Estime's sister, also was in attendance.

Town strains to accommodate student influx

Population growth

Why is Brookline's school system in need of expansion?

In recent years there have been an average of 650 students entering kindergarten townwide, according to Acting Interim Superintendent Joe Connelly. Meanwhile, the number of students graduating the high school has been about 450. This translates to an average of 207 additional students in the system per year for the last five years. According to Connelly, between 30 and 40 students also enter the school system between grades one and 11 each year. These enrollment changes have put an increasing strain on the district's space, budget and resources.

Connelly said that he believes the influx of new students is due at least in part to a turnover of property in the town.

"People that do not have any school age children are selling their property to people who do have school age children," he said. "And because Brookline is such a high-performing school system, it's a very attractive community for families with children to move into. And so as these residential properties turn over, they're being purchased by families with school-age children, and I think that's most likely the biggest driving force."

How will the growth continue in the future?

According to Connelly, there are approximately 550-700 students in each grade kindergarten through six district-wide and about 500 in each grade seven through 12. As these large classes move up through the system, they will continue to strain the schools' space and resources. Connelly also said that enrollment will continue to grow at an increasing rate. According to an informational flier distributed by the town, larger kindergarten classes have replaced smaller graduating classes for eight consecutive years, and projections indicate that this trend will continue for at least the next six years.

The high school

Why haven't there been many decisions or developments regarding the high school lately?

According to Connelly and Wolf Ditkoff, the town has submitted a Statement of Interest (SOI) to the Massachusetts School Building Authority (MSBA) requesting assistance in finding and implementing a solution for the high school's space problem.

According to Headmaster Deborah Holman, a Statement of Interest allows the state to consider Brookline for a portion of a pipeline of shared funding for some of its building projects. Ditkoff said that the town is waiting to move forward with conversations about possible solutions because if the SOI is approved, the MSBA will have a role in them.

Local race conflicts inspire public outcry

Jake Brodsky
News Editor

Between conflicts within the Brookline Police Department, Martin Luther King Day celebrations in the town and at the high school that addressed alleged institutionalized racism, and recent student protests, the month leading up to Black History Month was replete with local racial activism and attempts to raise awareness.

In December, police officers Estifanos Zerai-Misgun and Prentice Pilot vocalized concerns that they had encountered racial discrimination within the Brookline Police Department and felt unsafe in the presence of other officers. Both were put on unpaid leave and have stated that they are unlikely to come back.

"I lived in Charlestown, a mostly Irish town, when I was younger," Zerai-Misgun said. "There were a lot of race problems in Boston years ago. Living in Brookline, though, that's the most racism I've ever experienced. It's a different kind of racism. It's more of a discreet racism."

Pilot said he was skeptical about the police department investigation into the complaints.

"I'm not at all convinced about the ability of this town or police department to hold an investigation and figure things out," Pilot said. "What they do is they hold investigations, they have meetings and meetings, they convene and convene, hire a study. And then what happens throughout all that time is that time elapses, it becomes no longer a contemporaneous issue and then you move into issues like we've seen with so many other things that happened is this town."

On Jan. 5, over 40 people spoke at a meeting at Town Hall in response to the ongoing situation with the two officers. Among them was Steps to Success Adviser Dan Arroyo, who said he wanted both a clear time line and transparency on the issue.

"I grew up facing a lot of different racial situations, and if anybody has some shade on their skin, they know what I'm talking about," Arroyo said. "For all my allies and friends who are White, Caucasian, any other color you want to speak about, you'll never know what it is to live our lives, but it doesn't mean that you guys are racist. We do need to step up in this situation. We are asking for some transparency. We're talking about 'swift,' and I'm reading these reports about swift. What does 'swift' mean? Is it a month? Is it six months? It's almost as if people are saying things and there's no transparency to what's going on."

Community member Fred Lavitan spoke in support of the police department at the Jan. 5 meeting.

"It's a wonderful thing to come out here and support these officers tonight, as everyone has done," Lavitan said. "A number of you believe that the police are the problem. I'm sorry, but I strongly feel that you're wrong. Here in Brookline, we are very fortunate to have Dan O'Leary as our Chief of Police. Chief O'Leary is as good a chief as is possible. He is an honorable man. I believe in his honesty, and I think it is above question. It sickens me when I hear people say that the chief may be biased, or that the chief would never find one of his officers responsible for any wrongdoing. That's wrong and wrong again."

Lavitan defended the selectman's handling of the issue.

"Our selectmen are citizen volunteers," Lavitan said. "They deserve respect. They donate thousands of hours away from their families to service the town. If you don't like what they do, don't vote for them. Better yet, become involved in the town yourself. Run for town meeting or selectmen yourselves. See if you can do a better job."

Chief of Police Daniel O'Leary offered the department's perspective on the ongoing case in a separate interview. He responded to Zerai-Misgun's claim that O'Leary breached his confidentiality, causing him to be ostracized.

"He never told me he was ostracized," O'Leary said. "I told him, and I told the officers who were in the room that there was no way that this [complaint] would remain confidential. I spoke, and I told them I would speak at the Command Staff meeting, with almost all of our supervisors, which is a number tight around 32. I was going to tell them what was taking place, and I told them who the officers were. I told them, and they knew who the officers were. They knew Estifanos had brought that forth. I never promised him that it would stay confidential. As a matter of fact, I told him that it would not be staying confidential."

Against the backdrop of the police department investigation and Town Hall meeting, the town celebrated Martin Luther King Day. On Jan. 18, members of the Brookline community congregated at the Coolidge Corner Theatre for this annual event. They celebrated with songs, poetry readings and several speeches on race.

Later in the week, on Thursday, Jan. 21, the high school held its own MLK Day assembly. Speakers included Headmaster Deborah Holman, senior Kerimal Sutiel and senior Hal Triedman. There was also a song by senior Olivia Mosquera, a poem recitation by sophomore Juliette Estime and speeches by senior Donnaya Brown and Boston City Councilor Tito Jackson '93.

"Those with privilege have a moral obligation to use privilege to even out the playing field," Suriel said.

Jackson spoke last and challenged students at the high school to engage in difficult conversations on race.

"I would submit to you today that your time here, the challenges that you have in your classrooms, the difficult conversations, not the easy ones, not the ones where you're having fun, not the ones where you're joking, but the difficult, real, serious and deep conversations, are the ones that stretch you and make you grow and make you a better person. And to me, that would make you a real representative of Brookline High School," Jackson said.

The following day, Jan. 22, Brown led a protest in the atrium from C-block to G-block. Brown was joined by a crowd of students, who stood solemnly and quietly while some held signs that read, "I'm waiting for change #weneedtoact."

"I just want to stop talking. I want to stop talking and start talking," Brown said. "I want to have real conversations. Not just T-block conversations with my sophomores, this dumb Advisory stuff. It does absolutely nothing. It doesn't change anything. It doesn't really have a serious conversation. It makes everybody uncomfortable. It even makes the teachers uncomfortable because there's no preparation, no training. Not everybody can talk about race as easy as people think they can."

A week later, Friday, Jan. 29, Brown continued with a second protest. The focus that day was getting feedback from students on what they wanted to see changed at the high school. On a bulletin board in the atrium, students finished the sentence-starter "I want change because..." Responses included, "I want my honors class to reflect the school's population," "We all, including white people, benefit from a diverse, equitable society," "I'm tired of hearing 'White privilege does NOT exist!'" "Post Racial America is nonexistent," and "We should be a City on a Hill. And we can be." Brown noted her intention to stage another protest the following Friday during F-block, the purpose of which would be to conduct "speed-meeting" between students.

"I hope that this does not stop me from crossing the stage," Brown said. "I know that I've suddenly become a muckraker, in that I'm willing to set fire under some people's butts, and I love it. I know that I need to focus on school as well. I know that I have not been the best student in the world, but I know that that shouldn't stop teachers from telling me to do my best. I know that things are not going to change as fast as I want them to, but I don't want [anyone] to go another four years with the same crap that I went through."

Freshman cast unites on artistic process of the freshman play is crucial to the experience, as it is a time for discovery and becoming comfortable in the cast.

Freshman Yuen Ting Chow, an actor in the play, said that he was nervous to start rehearsals.

"At the beginning, you don't know how well the cast works together, or what the experience will be like so it's a bit nerve racking," Chow said.

Williams said that she compares beginning a play to learning a difficult dance routine.

"I want to get people acclimated to the world of the play, get them to start thinking about who their character is, and what their character is doing onstage, and to start working with the scenic designer to start thinking about what everything will look like and how people need to move in the space," Williams said.

Williams said that she thinks it's important for the actors to feel comfortable around each other to create a loose working environment. She says that this process involves learning about each other and about each other's characters.

"We play games and get a little silly with each other and run around— get to know one another," Williams said. "Then through rehearsing scenes, we talk about who our characters are and how they connect to each other, how they are different from each other, what's their relationship. Really just asking questions to get them thinking about how they relate to the other person."

Freshman Devasha Solomon, who plays Jonas' mother, said that becoming comfortable around each other is going to be easy.

"I think that with all of us being together for an hour after school most days, it's just going to happen," Solomon said. "We're all going to be here, in one room together, all the time."

Williams said that she expects the actors will be willing to collaborate with one another.

"I want people to think about being a team, and being good cooperators and working together," Williams said. "Everyone should be working hard to make the other person look really good and for everyone to bring their full creativity not just to what they're doing, but to the show."

SOFIA TONG/SAGAMORE STAFF

Freshmen Rebecca Perez, Summer Barnes and Jesse Viola bond before rehearsing the play "The Giver." Director Summer Williams said that the cast's cohesiveness is critical to the play's success.

Freshman Zachary Grinspoon, who plays Asher, said that the actors must be diligent in the beginning stages of the play to be successful.

"We only have 11 rehearsals to the run through, and that's important because you can't just put stuff off until later, like memorizing lines, you have to get it done early," Grinspoon said. "You have to be focused for every rehearsal, and give it your all from the beginning."

Freshman Sam Cain, who plays Jonas, has faith in the cast.

"I think it's gonna be a little challenging to get the lines down and try to really get the memorization part of this that's coming up," Cain said. "But because this is such a great cast and such a great community, I think we can pull it off."

METCO students overcome challenges in performing arts

GIOVANNA CASTRO FOR THE SAGAMORE

Junior Ndanu Mustisya participates in the drama program. Despite transportation challenges, Mustisya encourages METCO students to act in theater performances.

Sara Hogenboom
News Editor

Senior Brianna Rutty came to the high school with some theater experience from middle school. Eager to continue, she joined the freshman play and realized that she was the only person from the Metropolitan Council for Educational Opportunity program participating in it.

Transportation and underrepresentation in drama classes are some of the biggest dilemmas students participating in the METCO program face in the performing arts. Junior Ndanu Mutisya and Rutty said that both the METCO program and the drama program are beneficial to students, but not many students participate in both.

Mutisya said that the METCO program is very supportive of students who participate in drama.

"This year they gave us M7's for our commutes so that when I have Saturday rehearsals I am able to take the train there, and I don't have to pay for it," Mutisya said. "METCO gives you a card so you can ride the train for free."

Mutisya said that the drama program accommodates students in METCO with transportation difficulties, especially Christien Polos.

"I say, 'Polos, can we do this scene really quickly so I won't get home at 9:30 p.m.,' and he is usually very supportive," Mutisya said.

Rutty, who has been in several performances, said that she doesn't see many METCO students doing drama at the high school.

"I think that since there is not a big enough group that is in METCO or are students of color that do theatre it is not encouraging to go and want to do it," Rutty said.

According to Rutty, a combination of the METCO students not having friends and not being interested in drama leads to a small number of participants. Rutty said that the drama department has encouraged METCO students to join, but that has not been met with much enthusiasm or success.

"I know that they have made attempts to get more kids in METCO to do drama, but at this point I think they are beating a dead horse," Rutty said. "I don't think there is anything you could say to get them to do drama. I think that since I already had an initial interest before I came to the high school I then followed up on that, but I think for people that have never done drama, it's hard to interest them at this point."

Mutisya would like to see more students represented in the drama society, specifically.

"I think we just need to get more people to be in drama programs because we are underrepresented a lot," Mutisya said. "It would be cool if we could push people to audition so they could get into these types of programs."

According to Brookline High School METCO coordinator Keith Lezama, having METCO students participate in drama helps expand others' views on the program itself.

"I think it sends a message that our kids are well-versed. There is often this assumption that METCO students only do sports, basketball, football, soccer and volleyball," Lezama said. "But when our students take part in drama and theatre, I think it sends a message that the METCO program has students who participate in all activities that the high school offers."

Even though Rutty will be graduating this year, she said she hopes students will follow in her footsteps and participate in drama.

"Hopefully, I can encourage other students, especially if they are interested but are too scared to do it, to see me participate in drama and try it out in the future," Rutty said.

PRONOUNS

Jake Brodsky
News Editor

From Day of Dialogue to an ever-increasing presence of the Gay Trans Straight Alliance's (GTSA), transgender and non-binary students are making their voices heard in the high school. This year, the GTSA has taken an active role in influencing how students initially identify themselves to peers and teachers.

On the first day of school, in advisory and classes, students were asked to share their gender pronouns. This was part of the GTSA longtime effort to offer a safer transition for those who use gender neutral pronouns.

"There's not a graceful, easy opportunity for those students to be able to tell their peers or to even tell the teacher that they want a different name or pronoun unless there's something that's built into the introductions of the class," social studies teacher and GTSA co-adviser Kathryn Leslie said.

Leslie, dance teacher and GTSA co-Adviser Christien Polos and student members of the GTSA presented the idea at the annual school-wide faculty meeting before school started in early September. While the presentation was well received, some faculty members were worried about implementing pronouns on the first day.

"If someone made a comment or a snide remark in that day one, a teacher is immediately having to be on the offensive in terms of shutting down a disrespectful comment, and that's hard," Leslie said.

Other potential problems could have come from teachers using the pronouns incorrectly due to lack of experience, Leslie said.

Freshmen English teacher Jen Rose-Wood said that she was also worried that the system could potentially lead to kids being outed.

"If you ask your class a blanket question, 'Would anybody like to specify what their pronouns are?', then you're effectively asking that kid to come out in front of that class, and that may not be a safe environment," Rose-Wood said.

Despite these initial worries, Rose-Wood said the presentation was definitely strengthened by student voices. Above all, the presentation was informative for teachers.

Senior Jory Cherry, who spoke at the presentation on behalf of the GTSA, said that the teachers' response was far better than that of previous years, when an email was sent out.

"Many of the teachers were eager and enthusiastic, while the rest respectfully listened and at least took in what we said," Cherry said. "The year prior, we sent out an email to all the teachers about doing pronoun introductions, but none of them did. Having a face to face conversation with them all was successful."

According to Japanese teacher and former Gender and Society teacher Rachel Eio, the presentation quelled faculty apprehension.

"I think that their goal was to make it something that didn't have to be a big deal, so it just became part of a way that you introduce yourself," Eio said.

Both Rose-Wood and Eio were impressed at how maturely their students handled the pronouns introduction.

"I was actually really impressed by how comfortable my students were," Eio said. "I modeled it for them, I had another student model it for them and then everyone used it very easily."

Eio said that in her three classes on the first day, seven students used pronouns that she did not expect. Especially for those 9th graders who were new to the school, she said that her students were incredibly courageous.

"If nobody asks, then everyone makes some assumptions that probably aren't true," Eio said. "I think it's great that kids were brave enough and strong enough and bold enough to come out and be who they are."

Rose-Wood acknowledged how far ahead the current generation of students is, even compared to the faculty.

"We look to you to keep pushing us because there are important steps that we can take," Rose-Wood said. "For example, in English teaching, writers who are gay and lesbian or trans, I've never done that, and that's on me."

However, Leslie said there is more to be done. To start, the GTSA will set up Transgender Awareness Week, which occurs right before Thanksgiving break.

"The GTSA has really incredible leadership this year, and they are really interested in doing a lot more action and outreach," Leslie said.

By working with the GTSA and speaking at the Day of Dialogue, Cherry said they have become more open about their gender and helping others at the high school.

"I'm generally quieter and more introverted, but I've taken it upon myself to be really outspoken about my personal identity with people here, so that other kids can too," Cherry said.

Underclassmen thrive on varsity teams

Freshman girls varsity volleyball player Natalija Beslic wraps her arms around her teammates as they huddle during the match. Despite being new to the school and the team, she is no longer insecure on and off the court. Her nerves settle, her confidence rises, and she feels the support of her new teammates and friends behind her as the new set begins.

According to Beslic, being an underclassmen at a high school with over 2000 students can be daunting at first, but being part of a varsity team can boost an athlete's confidence on.

Beslic said that being on the varsity team can make an athlete a well rounded high school student.

"At first, it was scary because I didn't know anyone, but then I started making friends and it wasn't so bad, because we were all really close," Beslic said. "I think it's made me a little bit more confident with just walking around the school too, because of knowing older kids and feeling like I fit in a little bit better."

According to sophomore girls varsity volleyball player Olivia Brown, being on a varsity team gives her more confidence, especially when surrounded by upperclassmen.

"It's made me more social and not afraid of upperclassmen, because I bonded more with upperclassmen and underclassmen," Brown said. "I feel like I can just go up in the hallway and say hi to them, versus being afraid to say hi to them."

Freshman cheerleader Richard Lee said varsity athletes are pushed harder and have more expected out of them.

"[Being on varsity cheerleading] has impacted me by making me work harder, because the skills we do compared to last year's JV skills are much harder," Lee said. "So I've had to work harder and more to hit the stunts and hit the motions that we have to do."

According to Lee, being on the varsity cheerleading team has given him confidence outside of the team as well.

According to soccer player and sophomore Fiona Lobon, alongside an increase in confidence, her organizational skills with school and sports have improved immensely because of the support she receives from her teammates.

"I think just playing a sport in general has definitely helped me time manage better," Lobon said. "Also in school, it was nice knowing that you had older kids that could help you out if you ever needed help with anything."

According to Lobon, playing on a highly skilled team has helped her improve as a player.

"It made me so much better, because every person that I played with is so much bigger than me, and most of them were so much better than me," Lobon said. "So when you play with people that are very good, you start to get better."

According to Brown, playing against more competitive players at such a young age helped her with her skills and understanding of the game.

"I felt as though, because I was playing with higher level experienced people, I was therefore pushed to play at the same level as them," Brown said.

Sophomore varsity hockey player Jake Boyd said that he sees being on varsity as an underclassman as an honor. Being on varsity provides a higher level of play that helps him develop as a student, athlete and teammate.

"Practicing every day with kids bigger, faster and stronger than me, and playing against kids bigger, faster and stronger than me gave me the experience I needed to learn how to make myself better and how I can contribute more to the team," Boyd said.

Cross-training helps athletes stay healthy

Continuous trips to physical therapy. Continuous trips to the doctors. When will it end? Why do I keep getting injured?

Athletes might think that they are keeping their body in shape and healthy by playing one sport year round. Unfortunately, that is not always the case. According to health athletic trainer Alex Jzyk, playing one sport year round can put you more at risk of an injury that could leave you on the sidelines for longer than you'd like.

"It trains your muscles to only react to that one sport, so you're getting very limited fitness and muscle fibers for that one sport," Jzyk said.

In order to prevent such injuries, one can either play several sports, or cross-train, according to Jzyk.

"Cross-training is a combination of strengthening, speed work, agility drills, and plyometric training to build up a group of muscles and your over-

Despite having the two best records of any of the high school's fall sports teams this season, boys cross country and girls swim and dive garnered some of the smallest spectator turnouts.

Boys cross country continued on a long run of successful seasons in 2015. They finished 6th at All-States after grinding their way to a 9-2 regular season record. Girls swim and dive also experienced a very successful fall, finishing the regular season 10-2 and coming 5th at All-States.

Senior cross country captain Hal Triedman said he was disappointed with the amount of recognition his team got despite their success.

New players improve dynamic of volleyball team

BERTINA XUE
Arts Editor

The volleyball team's goals are written on posters taped to the walls in the Schluntz Gymnasium: "consistency," "team unity," and "run beautifully executed plays."

With only two returning varsity players this year, the volleyball team finds themselves with a very new and young team. Coach James Watson has introduced the players to a new philosophy.

Watson said that because the team is made up with so many new players, with many transplanted junior varsity players, he is patient and works with the players as individuals.

"You work on each individual's pluses and minuses," Watson said. "Then you help make their minuses their strengths, and you respect everybody."

Watson said that he tries to teach lessons beyond just volleyball.

"As far as I'm concerned, I'm here to teach them how to have fun in a game," Watson said. "I emphasize that word 'game.' It is not life, it is not a stress. What they learn from volleyball they can carry into life."

Sophomore Olivia Brown said the large number of new players on the team has affected the team dynamic.

"It's a whole new, but really good team dynamic this year. I feel like last year it was a lot more divided. This year, it's like one big group instead of multiple groups," Brown said. "I feel like I'm closer with the seniors, juniors, and freshmen."

Not only have there been changes in the team dynamic, but also the practice content has changed as well. According to Brown, Watson does not only focus on playing volleyball during practice.

"We do a lot of work on weights, band work, and a lot more strength and conditioning," Brown said. "Before, we mostly just played volleyball the whole time. The coach really values that strength and conditioning a lot."

According to senior captain Alicia Chan, players do affirmations during practice as well.

"The coach focuses a lot on strengthening our mental game, too," Chan said. "He has us do affirmations, so we tell ourselves that 'we're beautiful,' 'we're strong,' and 'we can do anything.'"

PETRA HUANG FOR THE SAGAMORE

Sophomore Olivia Brown consults head coach James Watson during practice. Brown is one of two returning varsity players, along with senior Neda Morakabati, and is optimistic about the season.

According to Watson, focusing on positives is important.

"In life you learn from your mistakes and you learn from all the positive things," Watson said. "You take the mistakes and you put them in the background. Then, you take all the positive things and move them to the foreground, and you keep learning like that."

Freshman Natalija Beslic said that having a positive attitude at all times helps on the court.

"It's been helping me with keeping my emotions off the court and being more positive and not letting mistakes get in the way of playing," Beslic said. "When my emotions get away, I usually get angry for missing something or playing bad, and this helps."

Watson said that the majority of positions on the team are held by sophomores and freshmen, and he will work together with the team to reach the goals that they established themselves.

"They're a very young team," Watson said. "If the school will understand that this might not be their year, next year and the year after they'll be fantastic. The goal is to get to the playoffs, so my job is to get them as close as I can to that."

Paris attacks must never be forgotten

Zhongfan Jing

Contributing Writer

On the night of Friday, Nov. 13, a deadly attack took place in Paris, France. Gunmen and suicide bombers terrorized a concert hall, a major sports stadium, restaurants and bars. The attacks were described by the President of France, François Hollande, as an "act of war" organized by the Islamic State militant group. This attack is a tragedy for all nations and races.

The first explosions took place outside the Stade de France stadium, where France was playing Germany in a friendly soccer match. A man wearing a suicide helt backed away from security guards and detonated explosives.

At the time, President François Hollande was attending the football match within. He was rushed to safety soon after. In a blink of an eye, a multitude of people lost their love ones. Within 20 minutes, five other attacks took place in different places that were also populated by many people. Blasts took at least 129 people's lives and left dozens more in critical condition.

The Monday after the attack, in my French class, my teacher held a discussion. We didn't mean to criticize the event, but to tell each other what facts we knew. We shared the first words that came to our minds about the attack. Words like 'suicide,' 'tragedy' and 'extreme' were brought up. Our teacher gave each of us a piece of pink heart-shaped note paper and asked us to write a short sentence to the people suffering from the attack. I wrote "never forget."

In order for the world to progress, history cannot be forgotten. We pinned the note onto the hack wall of the classroom. We will continue to see the pretty notes, even though the event is going to fade away in our memories. We have to remember.

Conflicts happen often and I am not surprised to hear of injuries during demonstrations or other negotiations between religions and politics. However, these all have nothing to do with the attack in Paris. In this case, people were enjoying a weekend night without an intent of protest. There should be nothing to be avenged.

MAIRIN QUILLEN/SAGAMORE STAFF

The victims killed during the tragic terrorist attacks in Paris on Nov. 13 must live on in our memories.

Even if there is something wrong with the political opinions of the country, there can always be more peaceful ways to solve the problem. By killing the innocent, hurting the hearts of the families of the victims and horrifying the people hearing the news, the only effect is maximizing the negative impression people have of specific organizations

Turning on the TV, one can see that terror attacks happen often, not only in one place, but around the world. People with different religions or political beliefs come into fierce disagreement with each other. In fact, all religions must be respected as all lives are essential. Confucius said, "Don't do to others what you don't want others to do to you."

Supporters of a religion of political ideology surely will find it unacceptable if their beliefs are misused. People should unite to face the challenge for all human beings. With fewer voices for vengeance and more understanding, the world will end up more whole.

We do not expect events like the attack in Paris again. Yet life is short, so remember to enjoy your life and tell the people you love that you love them. My French teacher often says to the class, "hug the ones around you and tell them how much you care about them."

Athletes in Powderpuff bond through intense competition

Eleni Kalaitzidis

Powderpuff has been an incredible experience for me. I was very hesitant about joining because I was terrified of getting hurt or letting down my teammates.

I had heard that this game was extremely dangerous and I knew absolutely nothing about football except that Tom Brady is the quarterback for the New England Patriots. I also knew nothing about rules or football terms, and I never thought that I would be able to learn everything I needed to learn by the time the game came around.

I thought about it and decided to give this a chance; I joined the team. I am so glad that I did because I have gotten to know so many amazing girls and I have learned so much about the game of football from our incredible coaches. It is amazing how I now know my teammates so well and have developed great friendships just from this one experience.

Being a junior, I realize how important these experiences really are. We have opened up to each other so much just by talking at practices, and every single girl on my team is genuinely caring and friendly.

I remember on the very first day of practice when our coach huddled us up and he began talking about how important this team really is. The thing that really stuck with me was when he told us, "from now on, we are a family."

And ever since then, I have felt exactly like that family with the girls on my team, and we have connected in many ways from this experience. I have

Student tries to balance school work with music

Alejandro Marin

Contributing Writer

Being a musician and having passion for music is a very tough commitment to have while balancing many other activities. School and sports are parts of my life that I take very seriously, which can be very hard to also balance with music and playing the drums.

I've been playing the drums for 12 years and I try to practice regularly. My goal is to practice at least for 30 minutes every single day. This used to be a very easy commitment when I was in middle school, but now, in high school, this type of commitment is very hard to keep. After school, I like to go work out with my rugby teammates while we aren't in season and during the rugby season I go to practice. This means that everyday I get home around at around six. Then I have hours of homework to do. This makes it very complicated for me to fit in the time to practice the drums for even thirty minutes every night.

I go to the New England Conservatory every single Saturday to play in a jazz ensemble, so it is very important for me to practice the pieces I am given every single day to be ready to play well on Saturdays. There are times that I show up to band practice and I need to improvise on the charts because I have not been able to practice. It gets slightly stressful sometimes because although I'm committed to my rugby team as well as my schoolwork, I also have a commitment to a band that needs me on the drums. It can get to be so stressful that sometimes I want to take a break from the drums. Those thoughts run through my head, but I always remember all the great times I have had playing live and just having fun on the kit that I know it would be even more challenging to stop. Even though I have many other commitments in my life, drums will never stop being one of my passions.

Committed Athletes

Noa Dalzell
Managing Editor, Sports

Senior Max Bochman always knew he would play football in college. He began playing when he was 7 years old "to be just like his brothers" but soon made it his mission to continue playing the sport competitively after high school.

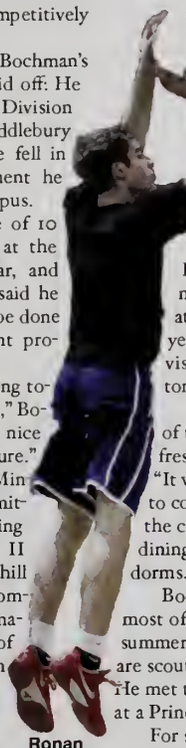
This past fall, Bochman's hard work finally paid off: He committed to play Division III football at Middlebury College, a school he fell in love with the moment he stepped onto its campus.

Bochman is one of 10 committed athletes at the high school thus far, and like the others, he said he is relieved to finally be done with the recruitment process.

"I've been working towards this for so long," Bochman said. "It's so nice to finally have it for sure."

Senior Chhany Minton, another committed athlete, is planning on playing Division II baseball at Stonehill College. For him, committing is an affirmation that a lifetime of hard work was worth it.

"A lot of people doubted my talents throughout my baseball career," Minton said. "It gives me a sense of pride."



Ronan Schwarz

The Recruitment Process

While no two athletes embark on identical recruitment journeys, the process usually begins the same way, with the athlete attending showcases and contacting schools. If a school shows interest, the athlete usually sends playing footage, and if all goes well, attend s an official overnight visit.

Senior Ally Lansbury, who is committed to play soccer at Trinity College next year, said this overnight visit was a deciding factor in her decision.

"I stayed with some of the girls, two of the freshmen," Lansbury said. "It was kind of like going to college. They showed me the campus, we ate in the dining hall, we stayed in the dorms. It was really fun."

Bochman said he made most of his connections in summer football camps that are scouted by college coaches. He met the Middlebury coach at a Princeton University camp.

For senior Eliot Rozovsky, the process was a little different. Several schools contacted him before he had the chance to contact them, and eventually, he opted to play Division III tennis for Bowdoin College.

"They were the first school to call me, last January, and I had no idea who they were," Rozovsky said. "I'd never even heard of Bowdoin, but all of a sudden they called and I was like, 'Wow, that's so cool. A college coach is calling me, saying he wants me on the team.'"

Choosing a School

Senior Patrick Webler turned down potential Division I offers in order to play baseball at the school he felt fit him best: Salve Regina University.

"When I found Salve, I immediately fell in love with it," Webler said. "It was everything that I wanted in a school- right by the water, in Rhode Island, a good academic fit. I can play baseball there, everyone was nice. There wasn't a single thing I disliked."

For senior Ronan Schwarz, the decision to commit to Colby College for basketball also came down to the visit.

"I got along really well with the team," Schwartz said. "And I really liked the coaches and players. I went to a couple of classes and realized it was a good fit academically as well as athletically."

Lansbury said that during her recruitment, interactions with coaches played a significant role in helping her make decisions.

"I decided a lot based on the coaches, which isn't necessarily good, because I know the coaches aren't there forever," Lansbury said. "But they definitely have a big impact because they are the ones that talk to you the whole time."

Bochman, on the other hand, chose Middlebury by looking at the big picture.

"It had a great football program and academically, the have an environmental science program, what I plan on majoring in, that is supposed to be one of the best in the country," Bochman said. "That was another factor."

Senior Gabby Rizika, who is committed to sail for Cornell University next fall, said she chose what college she would attend based on what team she felt could she could immediately affect.

"Ultimately, I chose Cornell because I wanted a program that was up-and-coming and could break the Top 10 nationally, but wasn't already in that Top 10," Rizika said. "Usually in sailing, what happens is that all [the top high school sailors] go to the Ivies, so you're on these stacked teams but have to wait until your sophomore or junior year to actually sail. I wanted to come in and be able to sail my freshman year, and be a part of a team that makes a difference."

The Aftermath

Schwarz is now beginning his last basketball season for the high school, and although he no longer has to worry about the future of his career, he said he will continue to play with the same motivation as years past.

"I don't want to take it easy from now on," Schwarz said. "I'm going to play like I don't know where I am going to college."

For Lansbury, committing early has proved especially advantageous, as the all-star soccer player tore her ACL in October and missed the remainder of the season.

"Since I just got surgery, it's really nice, actually," Lansbury said. "I can't play soccer for the rest of the year, but I already know [where I'm going], so I'm happy."

Minton said that committing alleviates the usual fall-of-senior-year stress.

"It's like second semester starting in October," Minton said. "It's relieving to know what school I'm going to and what I'm going to be doing at that school."

Terror threat dominates election discourse

Louie Goldsmith
Opinions Editor

With just under two months until the Iowa Caucuses, the 2016 Presidential campaign has begun in earnest. Candidates are traveling across the natinn to make speeches, while the Super PACs blitz the airwaves in early primary states.

Though the field vying for the Republican nomination has seen three major candidates drop nut, it remains histnrically large. All three of the candidates to suspend their campaigns are sitting or former governors. In most years these candidates would be formidable presences, but with the sheer volume of candidates they have been fnrced to drop out.

During the primaries, one of the most valuable opportunities for candidates to gain ground in the polls in during debates. They allow candidates to accentuate minor policy differences and gain personal attention from the public in ways they are not ordinarily able to.

However, some of the debates in the election cycle have drawn criticism from people who believe they have not been well modcrated. Because of the number of candidates, each nne has tried to grab media attention. This has led to chaos during debates. This criticism has also been aimed at the media running the debate who are seen as unable to maintain control.

A new issue that has become important in the campaign is foreign policy towards the chaotic Syrian Civil War, and the migrants escaping from ISIS' reign of terror within. Most Republican candidatcs have championed a policy of not allowing these migrants into the country for fear there may be radicalized terrorists in their number.

Recently, Republican frontrunner Dnnald Trump has advocated for no longer allowing Muslims to enter the country and forcing Muslims to identify themselves in public. These ideas have been criticized by members of both partics as denying equality and full-rights to American citizens on account nf their beliefs.

With regards to how to combat the Islamic State, Republican candidates are split on the specific details of their plans but have advncated a more aggressive military strategy than the Democratic candidates.

These Democratic candidates, led by Secretary of State Hillary Clinton and Senator Bernie Sanders, support plans to allow more refugees from the brutal war into the nation. They have not supported the sending of ground troops to fight ISIS, likening the conflict to the Iraq War which stretched on for a decade as the United States attempted to build a nation.

The debate over the migrants strikes at the core of the anti-immigrant sentiment which Republicans such as Dnnald Trump have used to gain support. The refugees fleeing from Syria view America as a last hope for their safety, while domestic political issues are preventing them from cnming.

Reaction to Paris must emphasize resilience

Amber Blu
Contributing Writer

As a French citizen, I want to speak for all French students here at the high school when I say that the events of Friday, Nov. 13 were shocking and painfully paralyzing.

Friday had been a normal day. In fact, I had to perform at the Orchestra concert which took place Friday night.

Right before the concert started, I received a text from my sister saying, "There's a terrorist attack in Paris," so I googled it and saw the number of deaths increasing every few minutes. The death toll stood at more than 100 by the time I had to go up on stage.

As I gripped my violin and played, I held my tears back while thinking about the victims, their families and my family and friends from whom I still had not heard.

When I got home, my family was watching French news. As soon as I entered my house I heard the news saying, "Several terrorist attacks occurred in Paris. Terrorists attacked a soccer stadium and the Bataclan concert hall, exploding bombs and firing on random civilians."

The death toll was 129 people, with more than 350 people wounded. My flow of tears was unstoppable. I texted all of my friends and called my family to make sure they were all safe.

I was so relieved to hear that they were safe, as the majority of my family members and many nf my friends live near the area where the attacks occurred. My French friends who live in Brookline and Boston then called me one by one, asking if all was fine and sharing this moment of terror and shock with me.

We met during the weekend and shared our grief with one another. It is simply heartbreaking to think that several hundred innocent people who simply wanted to enjoy some music, a soccer game or a dinner with friends, were robbed of their lives and futures. The witnesses will remain scarred for life, and the families and friends of the victims will be filled with sorrow forever.

The worst part for me, as well as for most French people I spoke to in America, was that we were so far away from our people, who were bleeding inside and out and mourning the many lives lost. There was nothing I could do.

I wish I were there to be together with my people, united and mourning in unison during this historic moment of terror. It was the first attack of this type France has ever experienced.

Our President, François Hollande, made an announcement, saying that France would not let terrorism forbid the French people from living, that we will not let terrorists force us to live in fear and that he was declaring a war against terrorism.

Over the weekend, thousands of French people went outside to sing "La Marseillaise," the French national anthem, and took pictures of themselves drinking with friends with captions such as, "Terrorists will not take our joy of living and our freedoms away from us." Drinking a glass of beer with friends became a political act.

I know that all of my friends dressed in black on Monday, Nov. 16, and so did I, despite the fact that I am so far away from France. Such a tragic event makes you realize how important your country is to you, and how much you love your people.

Some negative responses emerged in the few hours that followed the incident. Numerous people complained about the fact that other countries suffer from such attacks very often, and that Lebanon suffered from a terrorist act around the same time, yet was not spoken of as much.

It is true that all losses around the world are equally impnrtant, and we should speak about other countries too. What is also true is that it is completely disrespectful to make such statements in a time of mourning. We are not competing over who suffers the most around the globe.

One nf the reasons why the French massacre is so important is because these were the first major attacks of this type on French soil, and France hasn't suffered so many losses in a domestic attack since World War II. These attacks also prove that no country is safe from terrorism, not even powerful Western nations. This weekend, France was attacked. Next weekend, it could be England, Italy, Spain or the United States.

This event was a wake up call for Western nations who underestimated the strength of ISIS, the terrorist organization who claimed responsibility for these attacks. I really think that too many people are forgetting the fact that so many people were killed and many more are injured. Too many people are trying to make political statements about the way media is operating, claiming that we shouldn't care so much about France. Even now, however, families and friends are still mourning the deaths of their loved ones.

The French community in Boston gathered on Sunday to commemorate the victims. It is terrifying to think that terrorists are able to attack your cnuntry. I always believed that France was safe. If anything were to happen, I wnuld return home and be safe, because France had never suffered major terrorist attacks.

To learn that hundreds of French people were directly affected is terrifying. My heart is blecding. My heart will never stop aching because of this incident.

Writing this article is my way of representing my people's grief, and the pain my country went through. It feels like the least I can do. Even writing this brings tears to my eyes. Never would I have imagined that France would be the victim of such atrocities.

In January 2015, a first shocking terrorist attack took place against the magazine Charlie Hebdo, which killed 16 people. Almost a year later, an even more damaging and violent attack has taken place.

The pain is gripping us all. We mourn for the France that once was safe from terrorism, the France that symbolizes freedom and hope and the France that always makes us proud.

And at a moment like this, we are happy to see that although the Eiffel Tower shut down, although France is living a moment of darkness, the rest of the world including the United States are lighting up the colors of the French flag as support.

My France, my people, will forever remain strong and united. We will fight and we will continue to smile and hope. The city of light, the country of philosophy, art and human rights, will remain strong.

MUSEUM OF BAD ART

Arianna Iavarone
Staff Writer

According to the The Museum Of Bad Art's website, MOBA is a community-based, private institution dedicated to the collection, preservation, exhibition and celebration of bad art in all its forms and in all its glory. Their mission is to bring this art to the widest of audiences. The pieces of work below are featured at the Brookline Interactive Group on the third floor of the Unified Arts building.

CHIQUITA

The woman in the painting reassures and lures in the viewer with her wink, as the lava flows from the volcanic eruption in the desert behind her. She symbolizes peace and tranquility in overflowing destruction, with her festive colors and fruits against the red fiery hell behind her.

GREEN GODDESS

A green woman sitting on the rocks full of barnacles looks intensely off into the distance. Her hands and feet blur into the dark sea and a whitish foam surrounds her body mimicking the white color of her hair. The brown rocks provide the viewer with plenty of texture and essence. The green landscape and brown-green rocks create the perfect landscape background for this green goddess.

FACEOFF

An old man painted in black and white, with circular shades and hands in pockets, looks solemnly at a colorful gingered hair figure dressed in a bright faded orange jacket. Through these color techniques, the artist symbolizes a faceoff between two different time periods, favoring the younger generation. It describes the gaps of age and the disapproval of the older generation as the younger takes its place.
Purchased by M. Frank at a Boston thrift store

A NEW DAY

Volcanoes showing ongoing destruction, barren trees symbolizing the death of life, and dark clouds covering the sky signify impending doom are overshadowed by a pale and refreshing sun. The artist clearly describes how life is a series of ups and downs and that there is power in starting a new day from a fresh start.
Received as a gift from the artist at the Vince Lombardi Rest Area, and donated by Fay Pelloth

KING CAT

A majestic lion with a yellowish gaze and fierce expression stands out from the orange background. The whiskers, only a faint line against his prominent and golden mane, give the viewer more texture and emphasize the warm colors the artist used to create the piece. A shadow on the right side of the lion's face give more depth and create a more realistic image.

The class of 2016 proudly dedicates this yearbook to Dr. Chris Vick. As a keystone in the Brookline Community, Dr.Vick has shaped the lives of countless students and the direction of this high school. Although he is moving on, his impact will be felt long after his fist bumps have left the hallways. We cannot thank him enough and we wish him the best in his endeavors.

Dr. Vick has taught me the importance of my voice, and the power behind it. His guidance throughout my high school career has been incredibly impactful in shaping who I am today.

- Thea Charles-Moon

Dr. Vick has always been an inspiration to me. He was someone I could always go to for help, advice or a good laugh. I will never forget the countless afternoons perfecting our mock trial case or the feeling I got when he would smile at me after a good examination. I am lucky to have known him and BHS will not be the same without him.

- Jeremy Noel

Entering the Scholars program Sophomore year I knew little to nothing about my race's history in America. I paid little attention to the problems facing the black and brown communities in our country. I acknowledged racism, and faced my own racial discrimination and prejudice everyday, but I had never cared to really look at the big picture. The Scholars program opened my eyes to the beautiful history of people who look like our Scholars class. Not only did I learn history but I began to develop my own opinions and curiosities on our subjects in class. Where did I fall in society? What can I do to help in the struggle for justice and equality? You inspired these questions for me.

One day in class Dr. Vick said to us, "If you learn nothing else from me you must learn to be a part of our black and brown community and do something to help. If you do nothing, I have failed you." This really stuck with me. This was the first time I realized: people gave their lives for me to be where I am today. If I do nothing, I have failed them. Dr. Vick reminded me of the voice they gave me, and I intend to use it for as long as I can to do what is right, to help where I can, and to advocate for those who do not have a voice like I do.

- Johanna Kepler

Dr. Vick has taught me the importance of knowing where you come from and being proud of your culture and race. I have learned more about myself, in his African-American Latino Scholars class, than I could have asked for. I view Dr. Vick as a mentor - without him, I would not be the student I am today and I am truly grateful I got to learn from him over these past four years.

- Isabel Daniels

The only word I can think of, when I think of Dr. Vick, is grateful. I am so grateful to have met a man like him. I am grateful to be the last of the Dr. Brown clan he will teach, but I am most grateful that he never gave up on me, and saw something in me that I couldn't see in myself. So, through I am sad to see him go, I'm grateful that he is leaving to change the world one child at a time. I am always proud to be a scholar.

- Donnaya Brown

It's bittersweet watching such an influential man leave a place truly in need of people like Dr. Vick. What an example of a man! We have really lucked out. I didn't join scholars until I met Dr. Vick junior year during powderpuff practice and he is one of the main reasons I've had so many victories on and off the field. He taught me discipline and to never settle for anything less than your best. He exemplifies what it means to be an educator, father and friend. To me, Dr. Vick has been an inspiration when I'm down and to keep me grounded when I'm up. He has helped mold me into the person I am today, what I consider my best self so far. Dr. Vick never fails to lift us up and make us embrace our race, something no one has ever done for me. There are no words to express how much this man means to me and I will miss him very much. Although BHS will never be the same without him, I wish him the best wherever he goes, and know he will change the lives of many more kids, like he has been able to do for me.

Dear Members of the Class of 2016,

We offer a note of well-wishes while you enjoy your final April Break at Brookline High School. By the time you crack open the 2016 Murivian, you will be days away from graduation. Congratulations to each of you for the hard work, engagement, and tenacity you have demonstrated over the past four years.

Our hope is that you can take a moment to look at your photo from ninth grade and juxtapose it with your senior photo. In the Fall of 2012, you were just months away from middle school. We look at these photos as inspiration, reminding us how you came to us: wide-eyed and adolescent. Four years later, your faces have narrowed and the adults you are becoming have emerged in determination, poised visages.

And now you set your eyes on the next challenges: school, work, travel, and all the dignified next steps you will take beginning this June. Wherever you go and whoever you become, please know we at Brookline High School want always to welcome you back. We will miss your humor, your honesty, and your cohesion as a class and can hardly wait to hear what you will do in the world. In the meantime, The BHS faculty and staff will be rooting for you. Go Warriors!

Sincerely,

Deans Meyer and Alexander

Johanna Kepler

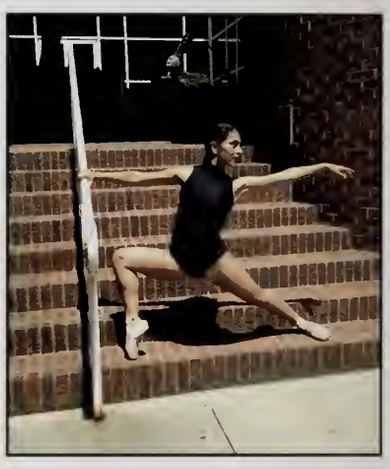
Congratulations Johanna and the Class of 2016!

We are so proud of you Johanna. You are a wonderful sister, daughter, student and dancer. While we are a bit sad to see this chapter of your life come to a close, we are excited to see what the future holds! Dream Big!!!!

Love,
Mom, Ema and Vicky



Jessica Newman

Dear Jessica,

This is the just the beginning of many great adventures ahead. Live life to the fullest. Walk every path, even those yet traveled. See the best in the world, even at the worst of times. You are a great person with a great heart and the world hasn't even begun to see all that you are going to be. Too proud for words.
Love always, Dad, Judy and Joey

Jackson Moreno-Field

We're so, so proud of you, Jackson!
Congratulations!
Love, Mom and Dad

Chhany Minton

CHHANY, WE KNOW YOU WILL CONTINUE TO DO GREAT THINGS

We love you forever.

-Mom, Dad, Surya, and Kia.

Mellissa Picker

Why did you grow up so fast? Yesterday a wondrous baby in our arms, today a strong, kind, confident, lovable, and hardworking woman. Continue to follow your passions and dreams and never loose the sensibility to question and change. We love you, always!

Maeve Kelly

We are so proud of you and all the things you've accomplished over the past 4 years. Thanks for always being our shinning star through it all! Congratulations!! Love, Mom, Dad, Eoin and Max last year together !

. . . to our
